

AGIS JOINS C5 AND SOSSEC

AGIS, Inc. has joined up with two distinguished consortia that seek solutions and advancements from innovative companies serving the Military and First Responder markets. The consortia enable an ease in contracting by using Other Transaction Authority which results in a reduction in the Government's procurement costs, in both dollars and time.

The Consortium for Command, Control and Communications in Cyberspace (C5) and the System of Systems Consortium (SOSSEC) solicit white papers and proposals from companies with existing products as well as those willing to develop new technology to meet a defined criteria or challenge. Very often, the criteria or challenges are broad in scope, so collaborations from multiple companies to provide a comprehensive solution are required.

The C5 consortium is composed of leading companies and institutions in the C4ISR and cyber technology sectors. C5 uses their Other Transaction Authority to accelerate the development and deployment of new capabilities to the Warfighter. C5 provides their members an innovative and common sense acquisition mechanism for rapid development of new technologies and products to meet government customer requirements.

The SOSSEC Consortium was specifically formed to address the needs of the Department of Defense (DoD) through use of Other Transaction Authority. It is founded on a simple concept: that collaboration, innovation, and cooperation among a broad spectrum of industry, academia and non-profits vastly improves the products and services delivered to its clients.

SOSSEC Consortium collaborates with federal, state, local, regional, and private sectors to conceive and implement transformational solutions.
